Genetec AutoVu: The Benefits Go Way Beyond Electronic Chalking

It's time to have an important discussion. It's the one about manual chalking and why, when a highly-superior method of parking enforcement exists, many officers are still reaching out of their vehicles or walking from vehicle to vehicle to mark parked cars' tires with a long chalk stick?

The rudimentary practice of manual chalking is:

- ineffective in wet weather,
- documented to cause physical injury due to repeated strain, and
- the only information it provides is if a car has moved since originally parked.

There is a better way. And, the way is so completely efficient it can pay for itself through the location of plates with multiple unpaid moving violations. And, that's not all. This premier system from the leader in Automatic License Plate Recognition (ALPR) technology has assisted law enforcement with the development of leads and even helped to solve cases.
